robots.txt file is used to inform search engines about which pages on your website should be crawled and indexed. It's a text file located in the root directory of your website. The file contains instructions for search engines regarding which parts of the website they are allowed to access and which parts they should avoid. This is useful for preventing search engines from indexing sensitive information or pages that are still under development. You can also use robots.txt to block access to specific pages or directories. The file is written in a simple, plain text format and is easy to edit. It's a good practice to regularly check and update your robots.txt file to ensure it reflects the current structure and content of your website. Some common rules include disallowing access to admin panels, development environments, and private content. You can also use the file to allow search engines to crawl specific pages or directories. The file is read by search engines when they visit your website, so it's important to make sure it's accessible and correctly formatted. There are many online tools and resources available to help you create and manage your robots.txt file. It's a simple but powerful tool for controlling search engine access to your website.
